HISTORY OF 1906

The World's Chief Events and Tendencies of a Year Outlined In Orderly Array For Busy Readers Who Want to Be Well Informed.

Higher and Higher Sweeps Prosperity's Tide

Look first at the enormous product won from the soil by the American machine-and-science-aided farmer. Secretary Shaw has figured that out for us within the past month-an output valued at $6,794,000,000, a total $324,and heart trouble. She leaves a hus- 000,000 b'gger than last year's. In the crop realm corn was king at a valuation of $1,100,000,000. Agricultural exports reached the high water mark of $976,000,000.

All of the great railroad and indus trial corporations have reported increased earnings, have paid higher div-latends and increased capital stock, while many have cut luscious surplus melons-notably Hill's hundred million ore deal distribution, the Pullman $35,-Fargo Express companies' forced division. Even Steel common resumed a

2 per cent dividend. Trusts have gobbled trusts, and, despite the rate law, rebate prosecutions and "Jungle" book exposures, the concentration of capital interests has gone forward, a new feature being the formation of huge holding companies in England, which was disclosed in the Findlay trial of the Standard Oil comwas absorbed by the oil trust in January. The Amalgamated Copper company absorbed the Heinze Interest, and two gigantic new trusts were formedthe American Farm Produce company. with $29,000,000 capital, and a $40,000,-000 rubber company to exploit the Kongo concession-both financed and controlled by the Ryan-Whitney inter-

other lines followed suit. Lawson's insurance attack took final shape in the formation of the International Policy Holders' committee, managed by Samuel Untermyer, and a costly campaign was waged with the existing management for control of these companies in the elections decreed by the new Armstrong law.

Whether you consider that labor has got its full share of prosperity or not, it is a fact that in nearly every industry wages have been advanced during the past year, sometimes on demand of the unions and sometimes voluntarily Mrs. Hannah Lowrey, and little son by employers. The dread of a great spent Christmas with her brother, James miners' strike which disturbed the business public when the year was young became acute in the Indianapolis conference of soft coal operators and miners FEB. 26, when the opera-James Bell and wife of Lancaster spent tors refused the demand of the anen Christmas day with his parents, Mr. and for a twelve and a half cent increase. Mrs. Franklin Bell, at South Lunenburg. At this point President Roosevelt appealed to both sides to get together, and when Robbins, the Pittsburg operator, agreed to a 5 per cent increase it was only a matter of time when all of the soft coal men had come to terms on the compromise of a 5.55 increase for two years, with certain concessions from the men. The hard coal trust, however, held out, and a strike was actually called APRIL 1, but after surrendering practically all of their demands in the interest of peace and under the leadership of President Mitchell the miners finally, MAY 7, agreed to a three year renewal of the arbitration board award on a basis that seemed to them a recogrelief, and after taking a few more nition of the union, which was, however, denied by the operators.

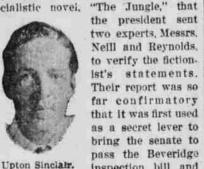

Another strike, which was begun JAN, 1 and which lasted through the year, was that of the job printers for an eight hour day. The lithographers struck for the same cause, AUG. 2. Alabama miners ended a two years' strike by referendum, AUG. 20. Fall River cotton mills restored twelve and a half submitted to a 10 per cent increase. During October and November the railroads, beginning with the Pennsylvania, agreed to a general wage increase in all classes of work, and this example was followed by the steel trust, the oil trust and other large corporations. The demand for labor in the west exceeded the supply. Chicago inaugurated its new freight subway, AUG. 15. The New York Central ran its first suburban electric todin OCT, 1. The Colorado river was at last turned into its original channel, OCT, 24, but steps were taken to preserve the Salton sea

Federal Powers Extended By a Rooseveltian Congress

Hardly was the Fifty-ninth congress under full headway last January when it became apparent that much muck raking had prepared favorable soil for the propagation of remedies either conceived or adopted by President Roose velt. His message had struck the keynote of the session by insisting on federal regulation of interstate railroad rates. A bill to this end, introduced by Hepburn of Iowa, was put through the house, FEB. 8, without Democratic opposition, the Democrats claiming priority in advocating the policy for which it stood. Aldrich and Foraker led the conservative opposition in the senate, securing numerous amendments and forcing the president to a virtual Democratic coalition. The Allison amendment for a broad court review brought about a degree of Republican harmony, however, and the bill passed the senate, FEB. 18, 71 to 3. It was signed JUNE 29.

Public opinion had been so stirred by the realistic picture of Chicago's packing house horrors in Upton Sinclair's socialistic novel, "The Jungle," that later was made public to force house action. Amended so as to place costs on government and omit label dates, the bill became a law.

One other important measure involving the use of new federal powers was the pure food bill. Under the leadership of Speaker Cannon a Republican insurrection against joint statehood for Arizona and New Mexico was crushed. The bill finally emerged from conference under a compromise agreement providing for the admission of Oklahoma and Indian Territory as the state of Oklahoma and authorizing Arizona and New Mexico Other important measures enacted were: To authorize the eighty-five foot

What the administration regarded as the crowning feature of a year of constructive statesmanship touching the public interest along numerous lines of action in the various executive departments was the spectacular South American journey of Secretary of State Root. At Rio Janeiro he was received with marked distinction by the Brazilelsewhere the Pennsylvania inaugurat- ian government and by the members of ed a two and a half cent fare and 2 | the pan-American congress. To all he cents on thousand mile tickets. The bore testimony to the good will of the United States government and to the absence of any ambitious designs for territory or conquest. When after election the president made his three days' personal inspection of the great isthmian canal work he was mightily pleased with what had been done. It was the first time that the chief executive had left American territory. The new commission appointed JULY 2 consisted of Messrs. Shonts, Stevens, Magoon, Hains, Endicott and Harrod. It came to the conclusion that it would be advisable to employ a certain number of Chinese laborers on the canal and that it would not be practicable to apply the eight hour regulation to the canal zone. On his return voyage the president visited Porto Rico.

An executive order on SEPT, 19 extended the eight hour law to all public works, whether conducted in government shops or otherwise. The civil service rules also were extended to include all laborers in the government employ.

The part played by the interstate commerce commission was extensive and varied, beginning with the execution of the order of congress to investigate the coal carrying railroads and the great oil combine. The examination of Pennsylvania railroad officials shocked the public by its disclosure of numerous official holdings of stock in coal companies, which was open to no other construction than that of bribery to secure railroad favors. Newly appointed mem ers of the enlarged commission were F. K. Lane, John S. Harlan and E. E. Clark. When the rate law went into effect on AUG. 24, for the first time in the history of the country all interstate commerce was under the control of this commission. The entire navy was reviewed by the president at Oyster Bay SEPT. 3.

The army in the Philippines had several important engagements, the chief of which was the battle of Mount cent wage cut JULY 1, and NOV. 28 | Dajo MAY 6, where 600 Moros were

Radical Policies Run Through Party Lines

More than in any previous year men of all parties have been unwilling to tolerate the leadership of tainted politicians or untried aspirants for office, Insurance exposures, rebate prosecutions and increased cost of living, despite the continuance of great business activity, all combined to stiffen the popular demand for square deal politics and anti-monopoly legislation, however people differed as to particular ways and means. On the Republican side President Roosevelt voiced this sentiment with his successful call for the rate, pure food, meat inspection and industrial alcohol laws and through his open opposition to the beef, railroad, coal, sugar and other trusts, culminating in challenge to mortal combat with the financial aggregation headed by John D. Rockefeller. At the same time that the president called a halt on the expose writers in his "muck rake" speech, APRIL 14, he startled the conservative by hinting at the idea of a progressive federal tax on "swollen fortunes," which in his recent annual message to congress, DEC. 4, was definitely urged for legislative action as

"the antidote for Socialism." In spite of or by virtue of these positions the personal following of the president, plus good crops and continued industrial prosperity, were in the main factors in the re-election of a Republican congress, NOV. 6, although the opposition, aided in some districts some of both, please!" by the labor vote, was able to reduce the Republican majority to fifty-eight. The keynote of the campaign was to stand pat on the tariff and prosperity.

The Roosevelt's estimate of the danger in his home state was measured just before election by the sending of Secretary of State Root to deliver the terrific broadside against Hearst contained in his Utica speech. The effect of the unique campaign thus begun has created a new political force known as "Hearstism."

Hearst thus became a presidential possibility and a claimant for the Democratic radical leadership, but he was still a local figure compared to that cut once more by the Nebraska statesman, Bryan, who on returning from his world tour, JUNE 28, received a series of worshipful welcomes all the way from New York to Lincoln and from St. Louis and Louisville through the south. In state after state he had been indorsed by the Democrats unanimously for 1908. At the very height of his triumph in his first speech in Madison Square Garden, New York, Bryan dared fate and repulsed many conservative Democrats by frankly advocating a system of federal and state owned railroads.

With one or two exceptions the states east and west that have gone Republican usually were found in line, the Democrats carrying Rhode Islan I, Minnesota, Oregon and Nevada, controlling Oklahoma's constitutional convention and recovering some lost ground in Missouri. Under the stress of much radical talk in both the older parties the Socialists didn't make so big a showing as they expected, especially in view of the impetus given to their movement by such notable accessions as Chicago's young milllonaire, Joseph Medill Patterson, who resigned MARCH 9 as Mayor Dunne's commissioner of publie works, and J. G. Phelps Stokes, the wealthy New York settlement worker.
